Introduction

The main purpose of a resume is to secure an interview. It is a personal advertisement of who you are and what you can offer an employer – your experiences, achievements, skills, education, etc.

This resume is your “foot in the door” to an employer and should make you stand out among your peers. It should interest the employer enough to schedule an interview and further investigate what you can offer the company. Once an interview is scheduled, you can really shine and hopefully get a job offer! There are many resume formats to choose from, most of which will be covered in this packet.

Whenever possible, try to contact the supervisor instead of the personnel department. Typically, personnel processes paperwork, but does not actually know what the supervisor is looking for. If the supervisor is contacted and he/she is interested in interviewing you, he/she can possibly expedite the process with personnel.

The resume formats discussed in this packet are as follows:

1. Chronological
2. Functional
3. Combination
4. Curriculum Vitae (US & UK)

Examples that are contained in this document are meant to be “snapshots” or portions of each resume, especially the UK curriculum vitae.

Resume Formats

Chronological Resume

A chronological resume is just that, chronological. It will list your experience from the most recent working backwards. This is one of the simplest formats to compose and for a hiring manager to understand. In short, it is logically organized.

Advantages:

- Highlights continuous employment & growth
- Simple to follow
- Can be advantageous for education and government career fields
- Emphasizes focused career direction
- Useful for continuing in the same career field

Disadvantages:

- Exposes large gaps in employment
- Not quite as easy to use when making a drastic career switch
- Seeking your first job

When composing a chronological resume, keep these guidelines in mind:

1. One to two pages in length.
2. Begin with your most recent professional history and work backwards.
3. Highlight the last ten years of work experience; however, simply summarize early experience unless it is particularly relevant to the potential position.
4. Must use year designations; month and day are optional.
5. No requirement to list every position change within the same employer. List the most recent position held and two or three others are needed.
6. Do not repeat common details among several jobs; change it up a bit!
7. When detailing a position, list the major achievements and duties to demonstrate your competency. This will help keep the resume length in check.
8. Write your resume with the job objective in mind. Make sure that the details you are listing within each job emphasize what is most important to your potential employer

Functional Resume

A functional resume is organized all your experience and qualifications by major headings, such as strengths or skills. Titles and work history are at the very most listed secondary, many times completely omitted. This style highlights skills and plays down employment, dates, and other historical factors. It doesn't care who you learned the skills from, just that you learned them!

Advantages:

- Great for those re-entering workforce, switching careers, or just starting out
- Emphasizes what you bring to the employer; flexibility
- Hides large gaps in employment history

Disadvantages:

- Requires more analysis to write and organize resume
- May not be quite as familiar to hiring manager
- Easy to target this resume to a position

When composing a functional resume, keep these guidelines in mind:

1. One to two pages in length.
2. Separate your history into four to six major headings within a specific area of expertise, such as: career development, public customer service, or communication.
3. List these heading in order of importance and how it relates to the job for which you are applying. Optional to list work history at the bottom.
4. Accomplishments can be included without detailing a specific employer.
5. Educational degrees can be listed before the qualifications portion; however, you may list high school diploma, technical training and related information below the qualifications.

Potential functional resume headings:

Engineering	Office Management	Business Management	Restaurant Management
Environmental Planning	Performing Arts	Teaching	Sales
Evaluation	Training	Clerical	Social Work
Family Counseling	Photography	Computer Programming	Special Education
Financial Management	Policy Making	Consultation	Supervision
Food Preparation	Presentation	Construction	Interviewing
Fundraising	Product Development	Corporate Administration	Investigation
Graphic Design	Program Development	Cost Analysis	Language Interpretation
Human Services	Public Speaking	Customer Relations	Legal
Inspection & Maintenance	Publishing	Curriculum Development	Marketing
Client Services	Purchasing	Data Processing	Systems Analysis
Community Relations	Quality Control	Design	Teaching
Merchandising	Real Estate	Drafting	Volunteer Management
Negotiation	Records Management	Editing	Media
Nursing	Recruiting	Education	Reporting

GPA: 3.5 of 4.0

UNIVERSITY OF CRIME FIGHTING
Master of Psychology in Criminal Psychology, 1983
GPA: 3.6 of 4.0

Combination Resume

A combination resume combines a chronological with a functional resume. Relevant skills and abilities are clustered under functional headings, while still listing work history with job titles, organization, dates and location beneath.

Advantages:

- Emphasizes strengths
- Affords flexibility to the one writing the resume
- Easy to tailor this resume to specific positions
- Downplays large employment gaps

Disadvantages:

- Can get lengthy if not careful
- Still shows large gaps in work history
- Require analysis of information for organizing data

When composing a combination resume, keep these guidelines in mind:

1. One to two pages in length.
2. Place functional headings after your job objective.
3. Use information from all your experience: volunteering, work, etc. and emphasize the strengths developed from those.
4. Work history is listed after the functional headings section in reverse chronological order; begin with most recent and work backwards.
5. Degrees are listed in reverse chronological order as well; include relevant trainings, certifications, etc. Honors and awards can be grouped within education or separate.
6. Licenses, credentials, languages, publications, etc. are listed if they are relevant to position for which you are applying.

When tailoring/targeting a functional or combination resume to a specific job, check out this list of traditional associated skill groupings:

1. Management Skills: Planning • Organizing • Scheduling • Delegating • Assigning • Directing • Hiring • Measuring Product • Setting Standards • Work Under Stress • Travel Frequently • Effective Team Member • Personnel Practices & Time Management

Curriculum Vitae (US)

A curriculum vitae (CV) in the US is typically used with applying within research or education career fields. It lists publications, presentations, etc. When composing a US CV, keep in mind that it can be lengthy, as it tends to follow your career.

When composing a curriculum vitae in the US, keep these guidelines in mind:

1. Here are some examples of sections that could be found on a US curriculum vitae:
 - a. Contact Details (a must, obviously!)
 - b. Education
 - c. Honors and Awards
 - d. Presentations
 - e. Papers or Publications
 - f. Research
 - g. Employment History
 - h. Lectures
 - i. Teaching Interests
 - j. Academic Service
 - k. Fellowships
2. The way in which you order the topics of your CV can be very flexible. Lead with what is most important to the agency or institution with whom you are applying.
3. Elaborate of your accomplishments and skill sets.
4. While the categories can be flexible, order the information within each category chronologically.
5. You may add additional headings to include licensures, certifications, workshops, applicable trainings, languages, etc.
6. Your CV could end up resembling more of a list than a standard US resume.
7. Utilize the knowledge of faculty at the institution of which you are currently a part to help refine your CV (they've already been through it!).

Curriculum Vitae (UK)

A curriculum vitae (CV) in the UK is the primary form of resume. These are longer than a standard US resume and include much more detail about education, interests and other personal details. UK CV's are typically more personal.

When composing curriculum vitae in the UK, keep these guidelines in mind:

1. Two to three pages in length.
2. Begin with your most recent professional history and work backwards.
3. Highlight the last ten years of work experience; however, simply summarize early experience unless it is particularly relevant to the potential position.
4. Use A4 paper and be sure to format your word processor to match this.
5. Do not repeat common details among several jobs; change it up a bit!
6. When detailing a position, list the major achievements and duties to demonstrate your competency. This will help keep the resume length in check.
7. Include areas of interest, hobbies, accomplishments, etc. The employer wants to get a good idea of who you are as a whole person, not just a potential employee.
8. Education section will go into a bit more details including information such as: subjects or modules taken, theses, dissertations, special projects, etc. Also, list pre-college education as well.
9. Emphasize human relation and contact in your bullets.

You may consider converting your U.S. education to match that of the U.K. This may help potential employers understand your educational background. Use the internet to research your specific educational circumstances.

Research Potential Employer

It is important to know what the employer is looking for and what they consider important. You also want to “use their language” when composing your resume. In order to do this, you need to do some sleuthing!

1. Go online and check out their website(s) and social media.
2. Use the actual job announcement to pull key words from to use in your resume.
3. This knowledge will be useful at an interview. They will want to know why you want to work for them and what you already know about their mission, values, products, service demographic, etc.

You can almost guarantee that they will be checking out you social media presence and trying to find out if you will be a good fit for their company.

Make sure your social media reputation is one that would be attractive to the employer!

Compile & Refine Data

1: Contact Details

Name: _____

Home Address: _____

Phone: _____

Professional Email: _____

2: Job Objective

This is a clear, concise statement of what you want to do as it relates to this employer. It needs to answer where, doing what, and for whom. Not all resumes will include a job objective.

Examples:

Program Manager for community relations organization using skills and experience in public relations, media relations, and fund raising.

Entry-level position as Assembler/Technician.

Special Education Teacher on elementary school level in Tidewater, Virginia allowing for implementation of special projects for handicapped children.

3: Work Experience

COMPILE DATA:

List employment history in reverse chronological order using this template to ensure you have all the pertinent details (repeat with all jobs on resume):

Job Title: _____ Dates of Employment: _____

Name of Company or Agency: _____

Address: _____

Telephone: _____

Supervisor's Name: _____

List duties: _____

Did you supervise anyone? _____ How many? _____

Did you train anyone? _____ How many? _____

Specific skills used: _____

Machines or operating systems used: _____

Reminders:

- Use numbers wherever possible to show the work you've done.
- If employed with military, be sure to translate it into civilian terms.
- Include volunteer and summer work as well if pertinent to the position you are seeking.
- Any accomplishments in this position?

4: Education

These are some general guidelines for listing education on resumes:

1. Begin your list with most recent first within the last ten years; always list degrees achieved.
1. You may list major field of study if you feel it is important and relevant to the position you are seeking.
2. In some cases, you may want to list special courses, seminars and trainings, but do not copy straight from your transcript.
3. You may list GPA is 3.5 or higher; however, be consistent. Do not list it for one school and not another. Some hiring managers may make negative assumptions if that is the case.
4. If your class rank is worth mentioning and relevant, you may list it here as well. Special honors, senior thesis, etc. may be included as well if you have no work experience and your emphasis is education.
5. Do not include high school if you have received college credits.
6. If you have not completed your college degree yet, add the amount of credits you have received towards your degree. If you are nine months away from graduation, you may list your graduation date.

List education in reverse chronological order using this template to ensure you have all the pertinent details, although you may not use all of the details once you refine the data (repeat with all education on resume):

Name of College or University: _____

City/State: _____

Year of graduation: _____ Major: _____

Other academic emphasis? _____

Honors, scholarships, awards: _____

Special courses, seminars, training (course titles and completed hours): _____

High School (if no college): _____

Examples:

- 1 { Bachelor of Science in Commerce, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, VA, 1999
Community College of the Air Force, Information Management Technology
- 2 { Credit Hours: 30

5: Skills and Abilities

Be sure to list any skills and abilities that will be pertinent to the job for which you are applying. For instance: Microsoft Office Suite (Word, PowerPoint, Excel) , Social Media (Facebook, Twitter), Public Speaking, CPR, etc.

Refine Data

Think of the duties, activities and accomplishments you've achieved in terms of three types of skills:

- Adaptive: skills used every day to survive in the workplace (on time, work well with others, good handshake, use of language, good first impressions, grooming, etc.)
- Transferable: general skills used in variety of jobs (good communication, organization, ability to learn, self-motivated, etc.)
- Job Content: skills specific to a particular job (specific machinery, computer programs, technical skills, etc.)

Compose short, concise sentences with action-oriented verbs to explain you duties. You can use an "Action – Object – Outcome" model.

Examples:

- 1 { Filed medical records for large hospital surgical department to simplify billing verb type what for whom purpose process.
- 2 { Organized 20-member youth group to canvas suburban community to increase verb size kind what purpose support and collect funds for political candidates. Efforts resulted in campaign for whom pledges of $5,000 after only three days. (Source: Frances Bastress)

Choose a Format

When deciding on what type of resume to choose, ask yourself some questions:

1. What am I most comfortable with composing?
2. What does my potential employer prefer?
3. What shows me off in the best light?
4. Are there any local customs I should honor? Meaning, does this culture like resumes a specific way?
5. What does my career field dictate I should choose?

Ultimately, this document is your advertisement; it should show you off in the best possible way!

Cover Letter

Many believe that cover letters are antiquated and some employers will specifically request them with a resume. What should you do?

One way of approaching this topic is this: A well-written cover letter will never hurt you.

Here are some guidelines when writing a cover letter:

1. Address it to a specific person, preferable the hiring manager. If the agency will not release that information, you can ask them to whom you should address this letter to. As a last resort, you may put the department.

Do not use:

To whom this may concern:

Dear sir/ma'am:

2. This letter should be no more than 2/3 of the page.
3. This should be on the same type of paper on which your resume is printed.
4. Use clear, concise language.
5. Type cover letter unless specifically requested to handwrite one.

Your cover letter should look similar to this:

Your address
Phone number

Date

Hiring Manager's name
Title
Name of Business
Address

Dear (Name),

1st Paragraph: Reason for writing, specific position or type of work, how you learned of the position, etc.

2nd Paragraph: Why you are interested, state any related experience you have that relates to the job without repeating your resume verbatim.

3rd Paragraph: Refer to the enclosed resume, express your desire for an interview or a chance to meet him/her.

Sincerely,

Signature

Typed name

Proofread

Finally, have someone (or several people) proofread your cover letter and resume. They will catch errors that you miss. Your A&FRC is always available to review your resume as well before you submit.

Some final things to watch out for:

- Check your margins; they should be equal – about one inch.
- Do not include references on resume or the statement “Reference available upon request.” This is now an understood concept and not necessary.
- Do not include a picture, date of birth, religion, political affiliation, or marital status.
- Use resume paper (light grey, beige or white).
- Do not use “I” and “my” statements in your resume.
- When incorporating volunteer experience with work experience, do not differentiate to two. Experience is experience whether paid or unpaid.

- Order your resume by what is most important – what you are using to get the employer interested.
- Watch your verb tenses: past experience needs past tense & present experience needs present tense; use past tense on a current job only when addressing a specific award or event in the past.
- Use key words from the job announcement and the agency or company's information; use their language!
- Keep dates on the right side of the page.
- When emailing your resume to an employer, convert it to a PDF or similar document. This will ensure that it looks professional and that it cannot be manipulated.
